Dame Elizabeth Corley will receive the 2026 King Husein Global Business & Interfaith Peace Award, in recognition of her distinguished leadership in global finance and her contributions to advancing ethical, inclusive, and socially responsible business practices. We would be honoured to invite her to accept this recognition as part of the 2026 cohort.

This recognition places Dame Elizabeth Corley among a distinguished global cohort of business leaders advancing ethical leadership and interfaith understanding through enterprise.

Dame Elizabeth Corley's career reflects a rare integration of financial excellence with ethical responsibility and long-term societal impact. Each year, a small number of distinguished leaders are selected for this recognition, forming the 2026 cohort of award recipients.

In her leadership roles across global finance, Dame Elizabeth Corley has exemplified a form of leadership that integrates financial excellence with ethical responsibility and long-term societal impact. As Chair of Schroders and former Global Chief Executive of Allianz Global Investors, she has played a pivotal role in shaping modern approaches to responsible investment, stewardship, and sustainable finance.

At a time when capital markets are increasingly called upon to address complex social challenges, Dame Elizabeth has consistently advanced the view that investment can and should serve broader human purposes. Her leadership in the development of impact investing, including her role in chairing the UK Government's advisory work on social impact investment and her foundational leadership of the Impact Investing Institute, has helped bring greater rigor, scale, and credibility to the alignment of capital with social good.

Equally significant is her contribution to fostering inclusive and values-respecting organisational cultures. During her tenure, Schroders has been recognised as a leading faith-friendly workplace in the United Kingdom, reflecting a commitment to ensuring that individuals of all faiths and beliefs, and none, can contribute fully and authentically within the workplace. This recognition speaks not only to policy, but to a broader culture of respect, dignity, and inclusion.

Dame Elizabeth's work across finance, public policy, and civil society reflects a consistent commitment to strengthening the relationship between institutions and the communities they serve. Through her engagement with initiatives in sustainable finance, governance, and cultural stewardship, she has contributed to building frameworks that support trust, resilience, and shared prosperity.

In a global context marked by increasing complexity and division, her leadership offers a compelling example of how business can serve as a force for connection rather than fragmentation. By advancing responsible investment, supporting inclusive workplace cultures, and helping shape institutions that reflect shared values, she embodies the principles that this Award seeks to recognise.
